

SAN JOSE MULTIFAMILY

Resetting the Rental Market

While fueled by one of the strongest economies, the recovery of San Jose's multifamily industry has stalled. The California city posted the steepest rent drop among major U.S. metros, down 1.1% to $2,737 on a trailing three-month basis through September, while the U.S. average rose for the second-consecutive month to $1,463. The occupancy rate in stabilized properties reflected lackluster demand, down 160 basis points to 94.2% year-over-year as of August.

The unemployment rate dropped to 9.5% in July from 12.0% in April, with preliminary data for August pointing to 7.6%. Unemployment claims filed across the state surpassed 8.8 million between mid-March and early October. Meanwhile, the employment market marked its fourth-consecutive month of contractions, declining 6.3% year-over-year through July. Its main economic driver—professional and business services—shrunk by only 3.2%. Despite elevated uncertainty about employees' return to the office, projects remain underway or in the planning stages, including the Adobe North Tower and Google's Downtown West development.

Developers had brought 1,515 units online by September and had another 11,333 underway. Meanwhile, transaction activity dwindled to a total of $554 million, for a price per unit that rose 11.9% to $535,977. Accounting for current circumstances, Yardi Matrix expects rents to depreciate 6.9% in 2020.
